PARTITION SUIT.

STEP MOTHER GETS A SHARE.

(Before Justice Beaman.)

MORSEHAR NARAYAN SAVA V. KRISHNARAO NARAYAN SAVA & OTHERS.

This was a suit for partition of the estate of one Narayan Madhavji Sava who died in Bombay on 7th December, 1913, leaving him surviving, two sons the plaintiff and the first defendant and a widow the second defendant. The property of which the plaintiff sought partition consisted of Rs. 8,000 in Government Promissory Notes, Rs. 200 in the Postal Savings Bank and certain household furniture and pots of the value of Rs. 140. There was no immovable property. The plaintiff claimed that he and the first defendant were entitled to an equal share (viz one half) in the property after making suitable provision for the maintenance of the second defendant who was the natural mother of the first defendant and step-mother of the plaintiff. The second defendant's contention was that according to a decision of the Bombay High Court in 17 Bom. 271 she was entitled to an equal share in the movable property left by her husband.

Mr. V. S. Bhambarkar and Mr. N. M. Patwardhan appeared for the plaintiff. Mr. T. M. Kajiji and Mr. K. S. Dastur appeared for the defendants.

His Lordship delivered the following judgment:—

The only material point raised by Mr. Kajiji is that the second defendant, mother of the minor first defendant, is entitled to an equal share with plaintiff and first defendant. The law relied on rests upon the decision in the case of Damodharadas Maneklal v. Ulltaram Maneklal 17 Bom. 271 which I shall never be able to bring myself to think was soundly reasoned or well decided; but as long as it stands it is binding on this Court. I think it a great pity that so doubtful and mischievous an exception to the fundamental principle of the legal notion of the joint Hindu family should thus have been brought on the law of this presidency which ever since has passed unquestioned. On a proper occasion doubtless it may yet come under the consideration of a Full Bench.

The effect of applying the law is that the sum of Rs. 8,000 (including Rs. 200 in Postal Savings Bank) which is the subject matter of this suit and now stands in the name of the plaintiff must be divided into three equal parts, of which the plaintiff takes one, the minor defendant another and the minor defendant's mother, the second defendant, the third.

This Yakuti or life-giving nectar has been prepared from the best, choicest and richest vegetable drugs. It has a wonderful property of increasing the nerve power and is specific for diseases. This valuable medicine is used in large quantities among Rajas, Maharajas and many of our esteemed customers. But we have ventured to give it publication simply with a view to place it before the general public owing to the demand of several friends. It is needless to expatiate upon the magical qualities of this our invaluable medicine. We would not like to blow the trumpet as is the fashion of the day, but suffice it to say that the use of this medicine is recommended to those who have any faith in the efficacy of Ayurvedic and Unani persons who desire to tone up the nervous system. We recommend it also to those memory and to guard against debility. It works like a charm and the effect is lasting. It restores strength and it is enough to say that much is not that which a performer admires, it is that which diffuses fragrance of its own accord. Price per tin containing 50 pills. Rupees ten only. Postage extra. No PARHEE necessary.

A DANGER SIGNAL.

The appearance of a branch of the Home Rule League in London seems to have excited as much concern in reactionary circles there as has been caused in similar circles in India. "The Times" has been excited into an unusually virulent outburst of misrepresentation and misstatement of facts. In justification of its demand that the Home Rule League should receive "official attention," it quotes from a pamphlet which has reached its office. We have not read this pamphlet, but if there is nothing more to be said against it than "The Times" is able to say, it ought to do a great deal of good, since it brings to the notice of the British public facts which, in spite of the vast amount of literature already in existence on the subject, even "The Times" ignorantly and dogmatically declares to be devoid of truth. But it is not only in London that the darkness of ignorance needs to be unveiled, for we find the great journal's namesake in this city, in its newly-acquired pose of guru of Indian political leaders, following in its wake and repeating almost word for word its unsustainable assertions.

The chief offence of the pamphlet, we gather from "The Times," is its statement that:

"They (Indians) are becoming alarmed at the frightful poverty of the agricultural population, the destruction of indigenous industries by foreign competition, and the decreasing vitality of both the educated and the uneducated classes, but especially of the latter."

"The Times" declares that each of these statements is untrue. As they are generally believed to be true by people in this country and have been widely accepted as true, and supported by a mass of evidence and reasoned argument by men like Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji and the Hon. Mr. Dinshaw

Wacha, to name only two who can hardly be described as wild extremists, it would be as well if our contemporaries would offer us some sort of justification for their contradiction. We can only suggest one slight alteration to confirm the accuracy of the statement contained in the pamphlet. It is not strictly accurate to say that Indians are "becoming alarmed." They have long since become alarmed and their alarm is not going to be allayed by the ex cathedra assertion of "The Times" that,

The condition of the peasantry is steadily improving; industrial development has become almost the main preoccupation of the Government of India; and the standard of comfort and vitality among all classes has shown a great advance during the last twenty years (the italics are ours.)

Then it appears that the pamphlet has offended by a reference to the acceptance of India's money in the war while refusing her men. Of course the application of this perfectly true statement is obvious. It refers to the fact that, while the Government have freely accepted the offers of monetary aid from India, representing a colossal sum comparatively to the resources of the country, it has steadily refused to allow Indians, other than those recruited on long service for the Army, to volunteer for service in the war. And we suppose, though we have not read the pamphlet, that this is put forward as a grievance of the Indian people. Well, if "The Times," either here or in London, does not know that this is a grievance, and a ranking one, in the Indian mind, then their ignorance makes them a far more potent source for mischief than the most rabid writer of Home Rule pamphlets can ever hope to be. "The Times" (London) even goes so far as to declare, that "the Indian revenues have not contributed a rupee to the cost of the war." That is a downright, wicked, damnable lie and no amount of sophistry can get over it. "The Times" (of India) is not quite so flagrant in its assertion of what is not true. It says that England has made "no financial demands on India, for not more than two millions sterling has been added to her military expenditure in the last two years." Well two millions is hardly a trifle, but, of course, the contribution of India to the war represents a far greater sum. Sir William Meyer, in his last budget speech, estimated the total value of the supplies and services of all sorts which India has undertaken on behalf of the War Office (exclusive of her valuable aid to Australia), at about £10 million in 1914-15, £18 million in 1915-16 and £28 million in 1916-17. The fact that India, having borne the burden of preparation for years, was prepared when the time came, which other parts of the Empire were not, and that therefore there was no actual addition to her revenues of the gross amount which her great services represent, does not and cannot retract one jot or tittle from the value of the sacrifices she has made. To turn round now and say: "Well, you didn't give us any money!" is the attitude of the hungry beggar, who complains because he is helped in kind and not in cash. India has given freely of her blood and her treasure so far as she has been allowed. That her soul has been kept in chains is the grievance that has burnt into her soul.

We should not have thought the matter worthy of such lengthy comment, for the sordid ingratitude of papers like "The Times" and its like has become a commonplace of Indian politics, and if we cannot reach over their heads ultimately there is little hope for India's future, but the matter has a greater importance because "The Times" demand that the League should receive official attention has already been anticipated. We hold no brief for the Home Rule League, though as far as we know it represents in its aims nothing more than the declared object of the Indian National Congress, while its name, as a matter of fact, represents something less. But we are concerned for the freedom of political discussion and constitutional propaganda in this country, and if that freedom is to be interfered with on the grounds put forward by "The Times," the utterance of unpalatable arguments, and we know of none other, then we may look forward to the speedy undoing of all the good that has been done during the last few years in India by the visit of a sympathetic, far-seeing and statesmanlike monarch and the work of a Viceroy who knew how to secure the confidence and trust of the people. Those who would hurry into measures of repression and suppression at the present moment will have to bear a very heavy burden of responsibility in the future. We speak with a deeper knowledge of the Indian mind than our contemporaries can claim to do and if they suppose that the attempt to suppress constitutional propaganda or agitation by drastic executive action is viewed with anything but strong suspicion and resentment, even by those who may not be inclined to support it, they are gravely mistaken.

Notes of the Day.

"Accidentally Delayed."

We commented on Saturday on the remarkable fact that there was up to that time no news of the statement made by Mr. Asquith on Monday last on the Irish question. Soon afterwards the missing telegram was released; it reached this office at about eleven o'clock on Saturday morning, with the laconic announcement that it had been "accidentally delayed by censorship."—censorship having apparently become a sort of mode of appeal like "majesty" or "excellency"! Some further explanation is due to the public, and we trust the Government will see that we get it, having regard to the very unpleasant interpretation that is likely to be given, indeed has already been given to this delay. Accidents happen in the best regulated offices, but it must be a pretty badly organised system, which allows a telegram of such immense importance to be accidentally delayed for a week until a newspaper draws attention to its mysterious absence and it is immediately found. The sub-editor in a newspaper office, who made a blunder of that sort, would find himself out in the street; or removed to a sphere of activity where he could not mislay telegrams or anything else. We trust that steps will be taken to protect the public against a repetition of this sort of thing. Incidentally, we may draw attention to the fact that no such accident is pleaded on behalf of the telegram containing Lord Lansdowne's statement in the Lords, which took only a day less to reach us.

A Misunderstanding.

Nor is Reuter clear as to the cause of the misunderstanding which has since arisen. One telegram makes Mr. Redmond say that he is loth to believe that the Cabinet favours coercion, and there is a reference to "restrictions on the Executive" as another ground of objection on the part of the Nationalists to the features of the scheme as revealed by Lord Lansdowne. We are told in yet another message, however, that Mr. Redmond's manifesto, suggesting a breach of faith, was provoked by an obscure passage in Lord Lansdowne's speech, which was interpreted as meaning that the settlement was only temporary as regards parliamentary representation but permanent as regards the exclusion of the Ulster counties. One can well understand that the Nationalists would not agree to that. It would leave the Nationalist minority in Ulster entirely unprotected, if at some future time the Irish members were to be excluded from Westminster, while the Ulster counties were excluded from the Irish Parliament.

The Settlement.

The settlement of the Irish question seems to have been arrived at by very considerable sacrifices on the part of the Nationalists. Not merely have they agreed to the exclusion of the six counties, but they seem to have agreed to an entirely new Home Rule Bill. But the settlement is only temporary and the whole question will have to be thrashed out again after the war. In the meanwhile Nationalist Ireland will govern itself, with the necessary safeguards, by a Parliament consisting of the Irish members now sitting in the House of Commons. Apparently there will be no election, but the Parliament will be set up and the members will just walk in and take their seats, at the same time retaining their seats at Westminster. Some provision is to be made for the future of the excluded counties but Reuter does not tell us what that is.

The Out-turn of Munitions.

Good heartening news from the theatres of the war—especially from the Western front—accumulates day by day. Despite this however the pessimists will continue to doubt whether the Allies' offensive has really begun. Pessimists of this species will unfortunately be with us until Prussian militarism is finally and effectually crushed. But whatever else the achievements of the Allies' forces during the last two weeks may not have effected, they have at least done one great thing. They have given the quietus for all time to those croakers who have never tired of belittling the efforts of Great Britain during the war. The combined offensive East and West has been due, as Mr. Lloyd George emphasised at the conference of Allied representatives at the War Office, to the vast output of munitions which has deprived the enemy of the initiative. France, indeed, has played a great part in this great work of production and supply of munitions. But the contribution of British has been even greater.

Stupendous Efforts.

How stupendous, in fact, it has been can only be realised when it is remembered, to quote Mr. Lloyd George again, that Britain has evolved out of nothing arsenals to supply a huge army. What these arsenals have effected and can effect can best be described in the language of the man who has been their creator. Most of these factories, he said, are completed and are turning out hundreds of guns. Heavy guns are rolling in at a great rate—though the new factories have attained only one-third of their full capacity. But when they attain the latter condition—which they must do soon, for the main difficulties have been solved—the output will be simply overwhelming. Well might Mr. Lloyd George then declare, "we have crossed the watershed and now the victory is beginning to flow in our direction." All this has been possible by co-operative endeavour in which Britain has contributed the greatest share. And that, too, in addition to the glorious achievements of her Navy, the heroism of her ever-growing Army and her expanding financial contributions.

Practical Economy.

It is very good news indeed from far-off Rangoon that considerations of true economy are not to be overlooked in the preparation for the forthcoming Viceroyal visit to Burma. A fitting reception is to be given to the Viceroy in a pandal to be erected near the landing wharf, but there are to be no triumphal arches nor are any grants to be made from the public funds for pandals other than the reception pandal and that for school children; or, in other words, while the spirit of enthusiastic welcome is to characterize the preparations, due regard is to be paid to the exigencies of the times by refraining from all expenditure on mere pomp and display. In this respect, it may be hoped, the example set by the people of Rangoon, will be followed in other parts of the country and no less by the Governments of all the provinces.

Zoroastrian Influences at Taxila.

Dr. Spooner's explorations at Pataliputra have led him to formulate a theory of Zoroastrian influence of an hitherto undiscovered nature on the religious and political history of India. Though Dr. Spooner's views in this connection have not yet commanded universal acceptance among critics in India, it is generally recognised that the fire and sun worshipping strangers from the West, known as "Magas" or "Sakas," might have formed the channel through whom Persian influences filtered down into India. Recently, Dr. Spooner's theory has received some support from Sir John Marshall, who, in reviewing the result of the excavations at Taxila during the last few years, has expressed the belief that traces of Zoroastrian influence can be distinctly found here too. Sir John Marshall calls attention in particular to the remains of a temple unearthed at Jandial, a site near Taxila. The style of architecture of this temple is semi-Greek and semi-Persian, and the temple, according to Sir John Marshall, "seems to have comprised a tower for fire-worship and a remarkable fan with its panels decorated with Greek impedimental fronts, Indian 'toranas' and ogee arches like the familiar Bengal roofs." Was such a temple, asks Sir John Marshall, dedicated to three distinct and once rival creeds which a political ruler had succeeded in reconciling or wished to reconcile? Sir John Marshall expresses his personal conviction that the whole fan was dedicated to Zoroastrian worship.

Apollonius of Tyana Vindicated.

With a view to fix the antiquity of this temple of fire-worship at Jandial Sir John Marshall summons to his aid independent testimony from an interesting quarter. Apollonius of Tyana, the great philosopher of the second and third centuries, and "the most noted of the moral teachers of his time," according to Merivale, has left an account of his visit to Taxila, in the course of which he speaks of the "underground house" of the city and of a semi-Greek temple. The descriptions left by Apollonius tally in a most remarkable manner with the structural character of the street and the houses disclosed by the excavations and lead one to believe that he must have actually visited the city. Sir John Marshall thinks that the ancient streets must have looked like "roads sunk between rows of cellars without windows, the basements of the houses being without doorways or windows, entered by ladders or stairs from the rooms above." The biographer of Apollonius has left a description of the royal palace at Taxila and of Apollonius's reception by the King. The unpretentious character of this palace, as noted down in the biography, tallies with what Sir John Marshall's excavations would lead one to imagine. Apollonius was discredited by many of his contemporaries for his supposed fanciful yarns and was even expelled from Italy by the Emperor Domitian. But Sir John Marshall thinks that Apollonius has been fully vindicated by the recent discoveries at Taxila.

THE DEFENCE OF INDIA ACT.

WHAT IT WAS MEANT FOR.

Mrs. Besant writes in "The Commonweal":—"On the 18th March, 1916, the Hon. Sir Reginald Craddock moved in the Supreme Legislative Council for leave to introduce a Defence of India (Criminal Law Amendment) Bill, "to secure the public safety and the defence of British India and for the more speedy trial of certain offences." The rules of business were suspended and the Bill was rushed through in a single day, though it placed the liberty of every one in India at the mercy of the autocratic Government, leaving no safeguard of any sort, for: "No order under this Act shall be called in question in any court, and no suit, prosecution, or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act." The reason for the hurry was not apparent: seven and a half months of war had passed without it, and another week for consideration and discussion could hardly have jeopardised the safety of the State. It was only the trust felt in Lord Hardinge, as a wise and just ruler; that induced the elected members to assent; very grudgingly, to the passage of the Bill. They forgot that Lord Hardinge's "We" royalty was drawing to its close, and that they were forging a fearful weapon for an unknown, and possibly untied, successor. The Bill was mentioned by the Viceroy in his brief opening speech as "a War measure," and he spoke of "attempts to disturb the public peace," of "information" that proves conclusively that a precautionary measure of this kind is absolutely necessary to meet an emergency that may arise." Sir Reginald Craddock amplified this statement; the powers were recruited for "securing the public safety and the defence of British India," and "apart from the military interests involved," there were in "some parts of the country sporadic manifestations of disorder which require to be nipped in the bud." He then went on to explain what they were; there was in America "a party of anarchists and revolutionaries who have been engaged in scattering revolutionary seed, first among Indians in that country, and secondly within India itself by private communications, by despatch of emissaries, and by the dissemination of anarchical and revolutionary literature." Large numbers of these people had come to India; a number of them had been already arrested; they and their sympathisers had been committing, or attempting to commit, acts of violence. These were in the Punjab, Bihar, there was the anarchist movement in Bengal, closely connected with that in the Punjab and there were in Bengal increasingly daring crimes. Lastly there was lawless disorder in West Punjab, not political, partly mere lawlessness, partly economic. It was a movement among "lawless Muhammadans" to loot and plunder Hindu shops, wrecking houses, etc. (Our readers will remember the incidents.) This had to be stopped, or the danger might become serious. There were wild rumours flying about, and "potential disturbers" might take advantage of religious fanaticism or economic unrest. "These, my Lord, are the causes which have led the Government to introduce this legislation. The disturbances have developed rapidly during the last few weeks." Hence the hurry.

Only the first two sections of the Bill are generally applicable all over India. The first is the title, duration and extent of the Bill. The second gives power to the Governor-General to make Rules for the purpose of securing public safety and the defence of India, and twelve sub-sections enumerate various objects, without prejudice to the general power given. They deal with military and naval dangers, safety of railways, explosives, His Majesty's forces, and the like, and to use the phrase, "prejudicial to the public safety," occurring as it does in the midst of these things and obviously referring to them, in the face of Sir Reginald's statement as to the kind of dangers to public safety against which the Bill was directed, is to use the powers conferred by the Act in a way which entirely disregards the pledges by which the Indian members were induced to support it. Sir Reginald said that "this procedure in no way goes beyond the necessities of the case, and that no loyal and peaceful citizen need feel any alarm at the introduction of this legislation!"

It is obvious that with statements made as to the nature of the crimes aimed at and the immediate dangers feared, it was difficult for members to oppose. Nevertheless the Bill was sharply criticised, and members evidently felt that the Government of the Government as to its use could not be thoroughly relied on. They had had the experience of the Press Act, and knew how opposed was the exercise of its powers to the professions made when the powers were asked for; members urged the definition of offences, pointed out that the provisions of the Bill went much beyond the "intentions with which it was brought forward," that the provisions should be confined to the necessities of the situation, so as "not to allow under the garb of a war measure" provisions which were "likely unnecessarily to disturb the public mind." 33 amendments were moved, and 31 were rejected or withdrawn, the Government being unyielding.

Sir Reginald Craddock finally assured the Council that "in the administration of an Act of this kind they may rest assured that under your Excellency's direction the action taken will not be more stringent than the necessities of the case warrant." But Lord Hardinge has gone.

THE WAR.

SUMMARY OF TELEGRAMSBRITISH
OFFENSIVE.SECOND LINE
OCCUPIED.RUSSIAN ADVANCE IN
ARMENIA.MR. ASQUITH ON IRISH SETTLEMENT.

The British continue to steadily increase their gains and at one point they have forced the enemy back to his third system of defence, four miles in the rear of his original front at Fricourt and Mametz. Large quantities of war material have fallen into their hands and prisoners amount to 10,000 since the beginning of the battle.

Austrians and Germans are perturbed at the Allied offensive and are endeavouring to discover Rumania's intentions.

The Russians repulsed an attempted enemy offensive on the left bank of the Stokhod. Fighting west of the Strypa has slackened.

The Turks have been hurled back from the heights eastward of Baiburt and are now retreating. The Russians after capturing a series of heights are progressing west and south-east of Mamakhatun.

The Italians have blown off the Castelletto peak by undermining it, a feat which was performed under the most arduous circumstances.

A belated Reuter's message dated July 10th states that Mr. Asquith, in the Commons, gave a synopsis of the main provisions of the Irish agreement. He emphasised that union in Ireland could only be brought about with the free assent of the excluded areas, and appealed to the House to seize the opportunity of effecting a lasting agreement. Mr. Asquith admitted that there had been some misunderstanding in the Cabinet.

Lord Lansdowne, in the House of Lords, outlining the provisional system of the Irish Government, enlarged somewhat on the Premier's statement, which provoked a manifesto from Mr. Redmond.

MESOPOTAMIA.

FALSE ATTACKS TO BE ABJURED.

(ASSOCIATED PRESS.)

ALLAHABAD, July 16.

The "Pioneer's" correspondent cables:—"The Times" in a leader on the coming statement in Parliament concerning Mesopotamia warns critics against two false lines of attack.

First, the suggestion that Sir William Meyer economised at the cost of the military needs, secondly, the quality of Indian munitions.

It points out that Britain is meeting all charges and so the Indian Finance department has no temptation to economise and adds that the Ministry of Munitions here has obtained the services of the best men in the Indian munition factories; their place being taken by amateurs.

CHANGED CONDITIONS OF THE WAR.DECLARATION OF LONDON
ABANDONED.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

LONDON, July 15.

The British Government has sent a memorandum to neutrals stating that the declaration of London has been abandoned because it was impossible to stand the strain of the changed conditions of the war, but the Allies will continue to conform to the principles of international law.

INTEGRITY OF HOLLAND.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

THE HAGUE, July 13.

The Chamber has adopted the Bill extending the Landsturm. The Minister of War said that the more the idea of peace penetrated among the belligerents, the more careful must the Dutch be to defeat attempts on their integrity.

SECOND POSITION OCCUPIED.

PRISONERS TOTAL 10,000.

LARGE QUANTITIES OF WAR MATERIAL
CAPTURED.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

LONDON, July 15.

The British communiqué says fierce fighting continued all day. We steadily increased our gains and now hold the enemy's second position from Bazentin-le-Petit to Longueval, inclusive, and the whole of Trones Wood.

Two determined counter-attacks were completely crushed. The Germans subsequently recaptured Bazentin-le-Petit, but were immediately ejected.

The period of the 11th and 12th July was mainly spent in bombarding the enemy's formidable second positions and in other preparations for a further advance.

The assault was launched at 3.25 this morning (Friday) after an intensive bombardment and the enemy were driven down the trenches along the whole front. During the attack we took many prisoners.

We relieved in Trones Wood a party of the Royal West Kents who had become separated from their comrades in the recent fighting and surrounded by the Germans, had gallantly held out in the north-east end of the wood for forty-eight hours.

The whole village of Bazentin-le-Petit remained in our hands after the Germans had been ejected in the afternoon.

ENEMY FORCED BACK TO THIRD LINE.

10,000 PRISONERS.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

LONDON, July 15.

General Haig this afternoon reports:—"All continues to go well on the British front and at one point we have forced the enemy back to his third system of defence, four miles in the rear of his original front at Fricourt and Mametz."

Total prisoners taken by the British amount to ten thousand since the beginning of the battle, including two thousand in the last twenty-four hours. The latter include a regimental commander of the Guards Division. Large quantities of war material have fallen into our hands.

SUCCESSES CONFIRMED.

ENEMY SURRENDERING FREELY.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

LONDON, July 14.

Reuter's representative wiring from a Press Camp in France says that according to the latest reports we have captured the villages of Longueval and Bazentin-le-Grand and cleared Trones Wood of the enemy. The weather is favourable.

LATER.

Reuter's representative at Headquarters says that later reports confirm the success of this morning's attack. We suffered small losses. The enemy have been surrendering freely and a regimental commander and staff are among our captives.

Till nine o'clock this morning, in addition to the villages previously mentioned, we had captured Bazentin-le-Petit which was taken by storm.

Fighting is proceeding around Ovillers, practically the whole of which is in our hands. Several counter-attacks against the newly-won positions have been repulsed. We are now consolidating our gains. The troops are in high spirits.

BEST NEWS SINCE THE PUSH BEGAN.NEWLY CAPTURED POSITIONS.
DESCRIBED.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL WAR SERVICE.)
LONDON, July 14.

The latest news from the British front is the best since the push began. Longueval, just north of Trones Wood, is more than six miles north-east of Albert and nearly five miles east of our original line.

Bazentin-le-Grand is two miles east of Longueval, while Bazentin-le-Petit, which Reuter's correspondent at Headquarters gives as captured, is a mile further north and nearer Bapaume.

The German position at Pozieres, a mile and a half north of Contalmaison, must be critical owing to our recent successes.

Pozieres lies athwart the main road from Albert to Bapaume.

The possession of Longueval brings our advance in this sector into line with the French at Hardecourt.

KITCHENER'S CONSCRIPTS.

RUDE AWAKENING FOR GERMANS.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL WAR SERVICE.)
PARIS, July 14.

It is stated that the Germans lost twelve thousand men in counter-attacks at Contalmaison. This shows the importance they attached to the position.

A German prisoner, formerly a waiter in London, said that the German officers told the men that the British were "Kitchener's conscripts" who knew nothing about soldiering and would throw down their rifles directly they came to close quarters with the Germans. The latter consequently expected a walkover, but "things were very much otherwise."

PARIS, July 14.

This afternoon's communiqué says that a German bomb attack north-east of the Avocourt Redoubt was repulsed. There has been intense artillery firing at Flourey.

The enemy attempted attacks in the Forest of Apremont and reconnoissances in Vaux Wood were dispersed by our barrage and rifle-fire respectively.

AN AEROPLANE REPRISAL.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM.)

PARIS, July 15.

The communiqué says the day was comparatively quiet on the whole front. French aeroplanes last night, as a reprisal for the bombardment of the open town of Luneville, dropped several heavy shells on the town of Mulheim.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

ROME, July 15.

Apart from increasing artillery activity on the whole front the feature of the communiqué is a repetition of the Italian feat of blowing off the summit of a mountain by a mine which had taken long to dig in the most arduous circumstances beneath the Castelletto peak.

The mine was exploded on the 12th burying the garrison. Alpini immediately scaled the debris-littered slopes and consolidated the position. They repulsed strong counter-attacks.

FUTURE PEACE TERMS.

A NEWSPAPER COMMENT.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

LONDON, July 14.

The Petrograd correspondent of the "Morning Post" says that the departure of the Council of Ministers for Imperial Headquarters has been much commented upon.

There is a strong feeling in influential quarters, that when Austria again issues feelers for a separate peace, they should be welcomed by the Allies.

Also, that the time has come for the Allies to agree on a basis of future peace terms.

Evoked by an obscure passage in Lord Lansdowne's speech, which was interpreted as meaning, that the settlement scheme, was only provisional as regards parliamentary representation, but permanent as regards the exclusion of the Ulster counties.

The Nationalists were also concerned about the threatened delay in introducing the amending Bill.

LATER.

Lord Lansdowne, replying to Mr. Redmond's manifesto, says he believes he is representing the views of Government.

IRISH AGREEMENT.

PREMIER'S STATEMENT.

PROVISIONS OF NEW BILL.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

LONDON, July 10.

In the House of Commons to-day Mr. Asquith said that the main provisions of the Irish agreement were the exclusion of the six Ulster counties, an Irish Parliament composed of the present Irish members of the Commons and an Appeal Court in Dublin, which would be appointed by the Imperial Executive. He said that the new Bill would provide for Imperial control of the Navy and Army and all matters arising out of the war. The agreement provided that the Bill should remain in force during the war and for a year after it. If the Government had not then made permanent provision for the Government of Ireland the period would be extended to enable such provision to be made. The Bill would probably be introduced next week.

AN APPEAL TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. Asquith emphasised that union in Ireland could only be brought about with the free assent of the excluded areas. He appealed to the House to seize the opportunity, which might not recur, to arrive at an agreement which would lead to a lasting settlement.

Mr. Asquith stated that the Government had not yet received any specific proposal from Unionists of the south and west of Ireland, but any such proposals would receive careful and sympathetic consideration.

He emphasised that there were features of the settlement which none would voluntarily have chosen had not the war compelled their introduction.

MISUNDERSTANDING IN CABINET.

Mr. Asquith admitted that there has been some misunderstanding in the Cabinet regarding the precise point at which the Cabinet should review the negotiations. He announced that Imperial representatives would be responsible for the Defence of Realm Act and other emergency legislation.

The time limit would be struck out of the Home Rule Act and the Bill would contain provisions regarding the future of the excluded counties.

Nationalist members of the Commons would continue to vote in the Commons after the Dublin Parliament had been established.

(Note to Editor.—The above message was accidentally delayed by censorship.)

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LORD LANSDOWNE OUTLINES THE SYSTEM.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

LONDON, July 11.

In the House of Lords Lord Lansdowne outlined the provisional system of the Irish Government which would come into force after the abolition of martial law.

Until the establishment of the new Government there would be an Irish Secretary with probably a military adviser.

The carrying of arms would be prohibited from tomorrow. There would be no amnesty and a garrison would be kept in Ireland. There would be special safeguards for loyalists of the south and west.

There would be a new Chief of Constabulary, who would be a soldier who knew all parties.

Lord Lansdowne said that he understood that the Sinn Féin movement was waning. The passage of the Bill embodying the settlement would take some time.

MR. REDMOND'S MANIFESTO.

ADHERES STRICTLY TO MR. LLOYD
GEORGE'S TERMS.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

LONDON, July 13.

The Nationalists state that Lord Lansdowne's speech was the first intimation of the restrictions on the Irish executive. Mr. Asquith would be asked whether Lord Lansdowne's statement was sanctioned by Government.

Mr. Redmond, in a manifesto, says he adheres strictly to Mr. Lloyd George's terms. Any departure in the direction indicated by Lord Lansdowne would be a breach of faith.

HOW TO CLEAR UP THE MATTER

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

LONDON, July 14.

Mr. Redmond, replying to Lord Lansdowne's speech yesterday, says the matter can only be cleared up by the production of a Government's amending Bill. He is loath to believe that the Cabinet favours localism.

SITUATION CONSIDERED TO BE EASIER.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM)

LATER.

It is stated that the Irish situation was easier after the Irish leaders had conferred with some members of the Cabinet last night, but the general feeling was that Mr. Asquith should make an explicit statement.

Mr. Redmond's manifesto was pro-

PARIS, July 14. On the occasion of the National celebration, General Haig has telegraphed to President Poincaré:—

The British Army fighting by the side of the brave French expresses its admiration for the French Army and unshakable confidence in the realisation of common hopes.

M. Poincaré has replied heartily reciprocating and saying:—To-day's ovation of the Allied troops in Paris is sufficient proof of public sentiment.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL WAR SERVICE.)

PARIS, July 14. Distributing diplomas of honour to relatives of men killed in the war, M. Poincaré made a speech in which he said that Frenchmen had revealed themselves as capable of frustrating the plans of the predatory Powers.

He eulogised the Allies, especially Britain, whose splendid young armies had sprung from the ground. The question, the President declared, is to be or not to be under the German heel. Therefore we shall not weaken.

VICEROY'S WAR NEWS.

ENEMY'S DILEMMA AT VERDUN.

(ASSOCIATED PRESS.)

SIMLA, July 15.

The following telegram has been received by the Viceroy from the Secretary of State, dated the 13th July:—

As the French had expected, the Germans are not slackening but redoubling their efforts before Verdun. Having attacked Damloup on the 11th, they attacked in the direction of Fort Souville on the 12th.

After a long and furious bombardment debouching from the village Fleury and attacking on a front of three miles, they gained some ground at the intersection of Fleury and Vaux roads north-west of Fort Souville.

The object of their violent attacks is obviously to thwart the offensive on the Somme, but the French believe that the day will come when the menace on the Somme will be so urgent that the enemy will have to give up Verdun in order to hold up the Anglo-French offensive, or if the enemy continues obstinately to attack Verdun, the movement on the Somme will be all the swifter. Meanwhile the offensive is following the normal course of methodical operations.

LORD HALDANE AND GERMANY.

AN INCIDENT IN THE LORDS.

(ASSOCIATED PRESS.)

In the House of Lords Lord Haldane drew attention to the importance of scientific training for the economic conflict after the war.

The Duke of Buccleuch suggested Lord Haldane's first explaining his conduct in misleading Great Britain and Germany regarding each other's intentions.

DEATH OF JAMES SANT THE PAINTER.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

LONDON, July 13.

The death of the painter Mr. James Sant is announced.

James Sant the veteran R.A. was born at Croxford in 1840. He had been living in retirement for some years. His first instructions in art were received from John Varley, one of the fathers of the British School of painting in water colour. He received a course of valuable tuition from Augustus Calcott R.A. in oil painting. It was not, however, until 1882 that he devoted himself to painting as a profession by becoming a student of the Royal Academy, where he studied for four years. Shortly after leaving he began to exhibit "subject figures" chiefly of children by which picture his name has been most widely associated, many of them having been engraved. "Infant Samuel," the "Infant Timothy," "Little Red Riding Hood" and "Dick Whittington" are typical examples of his early art. Later in life Mr. Sant took to portrait painting, and his pretty pictures of ladies and children became, and for some time continued to be, the fashion. Since 1895 he exhibited largely at the Royal Academy Exhibitions, his subjects being chiefly portraits. In 1896 he exhibited a portrait of Miss Dorothea Baird as Triphy, which attracted a good deal of attention. Mr. Sant was sixty-six years of age when he died.

LATEST CABLES.

FURTHER IMPORTANT SUCCESSSES.

CAVALRY NOW AT WORK.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAM.)

LONDON, July 16.

A communiqué from General Haig timed 10-30 last evening said:—

Heavy fighting all day in the Pozieres-Guilemont sector of the German second line resulted in further important British successes. We captured two woods, penetrated the German third line north of Bazentin-le-Grand and reached the outskirts of Pozieres. We captured the whole of Delville Wood east of Longueval, despite a desperate resistance and repulsed a strong counter-attack with severe enemy losses.

We gained a lodgment in Faureux Wood, where we penetrated the German third line. A squadron of Dragoon Guards in this vicinity successfully accounted for an enemy detachment. This is the first opportunity the cavalry have had in action since 1914. We captured the whole of the wood Bazentin-le-Petit, west of the village of that name and repulsed two counter-attacks.

Prisoners taken here include the commander of a Bavarian regiment and his whole staff.

Advancing east of Ovillers we fought our way to the outskirts of Pozieres.

Aeroplanes during the past forty-eight hours have been much hampered by unfavourable weather. Clouds during all Friday were seldom higher than five hundred feet. Nevertheless much valuable work has been done.

An enemy train was derailed by one of our bombing raids. We have destroyed in the past twenty-four hours three Fokkers, three biplanes and a double-engine aeroplane and forced another Fokker to land damaged. All our machines returned safely.

POLICY OF HEAVY RAPID BLOWS.

ENEMY SURRENDER FREELY.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL WAR SERVICE.)

LONDON, July 16.

Reuter's representative at Headquarters in a message timed 7-30 yesterday evening, says:—The British progress continues most satisfactorily. We have captured a wood and advanced towards Pozieres and Marquignies. We have captured over 2,000 prisoners in the past 24 hours and much material. Delville Wood was carried by the South Africans. The correspondent mentions the first employment of cavalry since early in the war, saying that detachments of the Dragoon Guards and the Deccan Horse charged, killing 16 men and capturing 34.

The correspondent states that our casualties in penetrating the German second line on Friday were comparatively light and the enemy surrendered freely.

Villages offered sterner opposition than trenches, but by the experiences of the fortnight the troops carefully sought and destroyed machine-gun redoubts and dugouts. We had captured Longueval and Bazentin-le-Grand before breakfast. The mist deepened in the forenoon and advantage was taken of it to consolidate the conquered ground. The struggle was renewed very intensely later in the day and an important attack was delivered in the evening in pursuance of General Haig's policy of heavy rapid blows to prevent the enemy from strengthening their new defences.

"OUR INTREPID ALLIES,"

FRENCH DESCRIPTIONS OF BRITISH ADVANCE.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL WAR SERVICE.)

PARIS, July 16.

"Magnificent success of our intrepid British Allies" is the theme of the French papers, which declare there is something majestic and inflexible in measured but continuous advances which give impression of latent power united with implacable will. It is pointed out that the Germans are in particular dread of a British advance north of Peronne, and have made incredible efforts to prevent it, but the British front is already nearly aligned with that of the French, thus facilitating the renewal of a combined advance.

Details of Friday's assault show that the British left starting between La Boisselle and Contalmaison swarmed into three lines of trenches. It met with desperate resistance from two Bavarian regiments at Ovillers. A mile north of Contalmaison it encountered fractions of the Prussian Guard, which were driven back to the outskirts of Pozieres. The central advance from between Mametz and Montauban towards the Bazentins quickly took several hundred prisoners, a battery of field-guns and a number of maxima in a succession of sharp fights which included the repulse of two counter-attacks. A Pomeranian Brigade held out very fiercely in Bazentin-le-Petit. Twice the British emerged from the wood into a single street of the village and twice they were compelled to withdraw. The third assault made in the afternoon was successful.

It is stated that fifteen hundred German corpses were found in the village. A company was captured fleeing towards Pozieres but the main body of Pomeranians escaped. The first task of the British right was to clear Trones Wood, after which it had covered half-a-mile to Longueval by noon. The Prussians defended Longueval but the Tommies' blood was up and they dashed forward with such impetuosity that they carried the whole place in less than an hour capturing a regiment's staff and the bulk of a battalion.

A French Eye-witness says all were astounded by the dash and valour of the British infantry who irresistibly swept away everything in their path.

A feature of the Allied advance is co-operative aeroplanes flying low to signal every movement of advancing infantry to the rear, enabling the guns to be left as successive rushes are made.

GERMAN ADMISSION.

(REUTER'S SPECIAL WAR SERVICE.)

LONDON, July 15.

A German official statement admits that the British have gained ground, pierced their lines between Pozieres and Longueval and occupied Trones Wood. The statement mentions attacks by minor British detachments in the Ancre-Huville sector and also near Armentieres and Arras.

BOMBAY VOLUNTEER ARTILLERY.

ANNUAL PRIZE GIVING.

LORD WILLINGDON'S REMINISCENCES.

The annual prize distribution ceremony of the Bombay Volunteer Artillery came off at their headquarters in Bazar Gate Street on Saturday night, his Excellency Lord Willingdon presiding. In the course of an interesting address Lord Willingdon paid a warm tribute to the selfless service rendered by members of the corps at the front and in defence work at Bombay. The latter work without being perhaps so showy as active service, was just as useful and merited recognition of the days when, as an officer in the Garrison Artillery, he commanded a fort at Home on the South Coast during the Boer war. His Excellency also thanked the members of the corps for making him their honorary colonel.

LORD WILLINGDON'S ADDRESS.

His Excellency said:—Colonel Milne, General Knight, Officers, Non-commissioned Officers and Men of the B. V. A., Ladies and Gentlemen,—Let me assure you at once that I am not going to make a speech as I am sure you are anxious to see me leave this exalted position on the platform and allow the more entertaining part of the programme to proceed. I must, however, thank you men of the Bombay Volunteer Artillery for the great honour you have done me by asking me to become honorary colonel of your corps. I should like to say there has always been one corps I wanted to become honorary colonel of—wait a minute, there are already two other volunteer corps, one of them in Poona, of which I am honorary colonel, and as some of the members of these may be present to-night and I must not offend them, let me say I feel you have done me an equal honour by making me your honorary colonel. (Laughter.) How your honorary colonel I should like to say there are two special reasons why you have conferred this honour upon me. First, your colonel told me only the other day that the inspiration for the formation of the Bombay Volunteer Artillery emanated from the brains of my father-in-law, Lord Brassey, when he was in India years ago. Being a dutiful son, I am delighted to be associated with work that he started, and I am sure Lady Willingdon also will be glad to hear I am your honorary colonel.

SOME ANCIENT HISTORY.

Second, it is ancient history, but I don't think any of you are aware of it,—during the first fifteen years of the twenty-five I served His Majesty, I was an officer in the Garrison Artillery in Sussex. I well remember how at the time of the South African war the medical authorities declared me unfit for service abroad and I remained at Home in charge of a fort on the South Coast waiting for a prospective enemy who never turned up. You here are now doing much the same thing, only your guns are very different from those of my day and I hope, should the enemy ever come, will soon drive him away. I mention this service of mine to let you see that your honorary colonel knows something about guns and you had better mind your p's and q's when he comes round on a tour of inspection. I would add this. I live at present on Malabar Point, near a fort, and I sincerely trust you will send your best gunners there in order that they will save the Governor in case of emergency. (Laughter.) I should like to refer to the mention in your colonel's report to me of record of service in the war. Many of your number have been to the front and some have won a distinction. But we must, however, not forget those who have remained behind to do the perhaps not so showy but none the less useful work of defence in Bombay, who have given their services freely and willingly in this time of need. As Governor of this Presidency let me thank you. As regards your new colonel, I think, his activities in other spheres are well known to all of you and there is no doubt that he will work to even improve the efficiency of his corps. I assure you in conclusion that your honorary colonel and the daughter of Lord Brassey will hereafter take the greatest interest in the welfare of your corps. (Applause.)

General Knight, who also spoke, said he thought the fact that his Excellency had become honorary colonel of the corps would bring many new recruits, while their new colonel would be a great help to them in this direction. Their record for the past year was a good one, and one hoped it was the precursor of many good years to come. They had allowed during the past year a number of Garrison Artillery men to go to the front, who otherwise could not have been spared, and the authorities looked to the honour of the B. V. A. to keep up their numbers and efficiency in order that more men could be sent to the front.

Colonel Wardlaw-Milne the commandant, having given a resume of the past season there was a long list of prizes, which his Excellency distributed.

The evening wound up very enjoyably with a concert.

Nervous Dyspepsia

The Modern Scourge and How to Meet it.

The pace at which we live, the hustle now so necessary for success, have unfortunately a very bad effect on the nervous and digestive systems; and this high pressure, increased lately to an alarming degree, often sows the seeds of more deadly trouble. But a sure and safe cure is at hand in that famous British Remedy, Dr. Cassell's Tablets.

Dr. Charles W.
